- Located in Kannapolis, NC
- A private-public venture founded under the auspices of David H. Murdock, owner of Dole Foods Company, Inc. and Castle & Cooke, LLC, to foster collaboration and further knowledge in biotechnology, nutrition, agriculture, and health en route to becoming “the world’s epicenter of nutrition and disease research.”
- Corporate partnerships with NCRC include Anatomics, Carolinas HealthCare System, Dole Foods, Inception Micro Angel Fund (IMAF), LabCorp, Lovelace Respiratory Research Institute, Pharmaceutical Product Development (PPD), Red Hat, Sensory Spectrum, General Mills, Monsanto and Zeiss.
- Eight universities house research operations at Kannapolis, including seven UNC institutions, offering a wide array of opportunities for professors, students, and fellow scientists to work collaboratively on projects that will sustain and improve the vitality of human life.
- Appalachian State University: Human Performance Laboratory
 - The mission of the ASU Human Performance Laboratory is to investigate the influence of unique plant molecules such as flavonoids on age-related loss of muscle mass, muscle mitochondrial biogenesis and exercise-induced changes in immune function, oxidative stress and inflammation. The laboratory is fully equipped to measure human metabolic responses to varying exercise workloads under specified nutritional conditions.
- NC A&T State University: Center of Excellence for Post Harvest Technologies (CEPHT)
 - CEPHT conducts cutting-edge research in post harvest technologies and food science. CEPHT’s goal is to develop multidisciplinary programs focused on post harvest technologies including research pertaining to processing, preservation, consumer research, recovery of health promoting food components, food safety issues, storage stability and quality, and value-added product development for food and non-food uses.
- NC Central University: Nutrition Research Program
 - North Carolina Central University’s Nutrition Research Program conducts groundbreaking work on Zebrafish and rodent cancer models to advance knowledge of human nutrition at the cellular and genetic level. This program complements and strengthens the metabolomics and genomics focus of the other NCRC partners.
- NC State University: Plants for Human Health Institute (PHHI)
 - The PHHI is part of an integrated effort across NCRC to utilize emerging technologies for plant improvement and human health benefits. Staffed by the NCSU College of Agriculture and Life Sciences, the role of the Institute is to develop a new generation of fruits and vegetables which are pharmacologically active at dietary levels of intake, and to investigate medicinal plant resources from sources around the globe which may have a place in the future American marketplace. Researchers use advanced scientific tools to gain new insight into cellular processes, and then translate these breakthroughs through genomics and plant breeding into plants with desired traits.
- UNC Chapel Hill: Nutrition Research Institute (NRI)
 - Using advanced genomic and metabolomic biotechnology, the NRI develops innovative approaches to understanding the role of diet and activity in brain development, cancer prevention, and prevention and treatment of obesity. The Institute studies individual metabolic variations to develop nutrition solutions that are targeted to an individual, allowing healthcare professionals to provide patient-specific treatment.
- UNC Charlotte: Bioinformatics Research Center (BRC)
 - UNC Charlotte’s Bioinformatics Research Center (BRC) defines bioinformatics as the “discovery, development, and application of novel computational technologies to help solve important biological problems.” At NCRC, the Center provides specialized computer systems and software, data management solutions and analysis for academic researchers and biotechnology companies. In this role, BRC offers sophisticated computational support in the design and development of new research and technologies.
- UNC Greensboro: Center for Research Excellence in Bioactive Food Components
 - The UNC Greensboro (UNCG) Center for Research Excellence in Bioactive Food Components at NCRC is a satellite to the UNCG Department of Nutrition, School of Human Environmental Sciences on the UNCG main campus. The focus of the Center’s research is to understand cellular and molecular mechanisms of action in bioactive food components and the molecular targets for these dietary components. The Center also focuses on expanding the fundamental understanding of these components and their benefits to human health and wellness, healthy aging and prevention of diseases such as cancer.
